DISPUTE RESOLUTIONS

Volume 1 Issue 5 October 2018

Message to the Readers

"May you live in interesting times" is a traditional Chinese curse. The period after the 2015 amendments to the Arbitration and Conciliation Act, 1996 has undoubtedly been interesting times. Whether the consequent evolution of the law will turn out better for the Arbitration regime, both international and domestic, will depend on how effectively the law is likely to be implemented.

The last few months have been particularly noteworthy. The applicability of the 2015 amendments to the Arbitration and Conciliation Act, 1996 itself was a bone of contention before various courts. In The Board of Control for Cricket in India Vs. Kochi Cricket Pvt. Ltd., the Supreme Court categorically held that, "…Section 36 as amended should apply to Section 34 applications filed before commencement of Amended Act." The result of this is that there is no automatic stay of the Arbitration award even if the award was made before October 2015.

In Cheran Properties Limited Vs. Kasturi & Sons Ltd. and others and in Ameet Lalchand Shah and others Vs. Rishabh Enterprises and other the Supreme Court elaborated and defined the contours of certain important principles. In the Cheran properties case, the enforcement and execution of an arbitration award before the National Company Law Tribunal was discussed and the law was laid down. Likewise, in Ameet Lalchand case, the court discussed the jurisprudential basis for holding how a mere allegation of fraud would not preclude a reference to arbitration.

In yet another path breaking judgment, the Supreme Court in Sundaram Finance Limited Vs. Abdul Samad dispensed with the necessity of obtaining a transfer decree to enable execution of an arbitration award and held that a party could directly apply to the court which had jurisdiction over the assets.

The one standard accusation against Indian Courts in so far as the arbitration regime is concerned is that they tend to interfere with arbitration awards at the drop of a hat. Two judgments of the Delhi High Court delivered in recent times have done much to allay these fears. In NHAI Vs. Bsc. Rbm- Pati Joint Ventures, the Delhi High Court held that the Arbitral Tribunal / Arbitrator was the final arbitrar on factual and legal issues and that, errors "which stop short of perversity" must not be interfered with. Again, in Delhi Metro Rail Corporation Limited Vs. Delhi Airport Metro Express Private Limited the Delhi High Court held that the court does not sit as a court of appeal over an arbitral award. These judgments could infuse more confidence about the Arbitration regime in India.

Another interesting development, though not court related is that about 50 leading practitioners in Arbitration law and businessmen assembled in July 2018 at Maxwell Chambers, Singapore for a breakfast seminar on, "Protecting your Investments in India: Developments in Dispute Resolution". By all accounts the discussion sounded a very positive note on the recent developments in arbitration law in India.

We at NPAC hope that this trend would continue and would lead to interesting times in the Arbitral regime that would be a boon and not a bane.

❖ SC sends OYO-Zo Rooms dispute for arbitration

- OYO and Zostel Hospitality have been locked in litigation ever since OYO in October last year decided to call off a deal to buy Zostel's Zo Rooms. While OYO contested in the Supreme Court that the termsheet for the deal was non-binding, Zostel argued that the arbitration clause in the term-sheet was binding, and sought arbitration.
- Zostel, a portfolio company of US-based Tiger Global Management, had earlier also alleged data theft by OYO during due diligence.
- The Supreme Court has directed OYO and Zostel Hospitality towards arbitration to settle their dispute that followed the terminated acquisition. A three-judge Bench comprising the former Chief Justice of India Dipak Misra, Justice DY Chandrachud and Justice AM Khanwilkar appointed former Chief Justice of India, Justice AM Ahmadi, as the sole arbitrator, whose decision shall be final and binding. The arbitrator has 12 months to reach a conclusion.

❖ Supreme Court on 'Place' and 'Seat' of Arbitration:

- The Bench of former Chief Justice of India Dipak Misra and Justices AM Khanwilkar and DY Chandrachud in the case of Union of India v. Hardy Exploration and Production (India) Inc., determined that the 'place' mentioned in an arbitration clause does not assume the status of 'seat of arbitration' unless the condition attached to the former is satisfied.
- It was held that in the present case, there was neither agreement on the place of arbitration, nor was there any determination made to that effect. Therefore, the Bench held, the word 'place' cannot be used as 'seat' - "To elaborate, a venue can become a seat if something else is added to it as a concomitant. But a place unlike seat, at least as is seen in the contract, can become a seat if one of the conditions precedent is satisfied. It does not ipso facto assume the status of seat. Thus understood, Kuala Lumpur is not the seat or place of arbitration and the interchangeable use will not apply in stricto sensu."
- The Bench set aside the Delhi High Court judgment and held that, given the facts of the case, the courts in India have jurisdiction to entertain the application made under Section 34.

❖ 'Association' referred to in Section 2(1)(f)(iii) of the Arbitration and Conciliation Act would include a consortium of companies, one of which is a foreign company: SC

- Consortium of M/s Larsen and Toubro, an Indian company, together with Scomi Engineering Bhd, a Company incorporated in Malaysia, filed a petition under Section 11 of the Act before the Supreme Court, for appointing an arbitrator.
- Senior Advocate Gopal Jain appearing for the Consortium, contended that since one of the parties to the arbitration agreement was a body corporate incorporated in Malaysia, it would attract Section 2(1)(f)(ii) of the Act. On the other hand, Senior Advocate Shyam Divan, who appeared for MMRDA, contended that they are really an un-incorporated association and would, therefore, fall within Section 2(1)(f)(iii) as being an association or a body of individuals, provided the central management and control is exercised in any country other than India.
- The bench comprising Justice RF Nariman and Justice Navin Sinha said: "Section 2(1)(f)(iii) of the Act refers to two different sets of persons: an "association" as distinct and separate from a "body of Individuals"For example, under Section 2(31) of the Income Tax Act, 1961, "person" is defined as including, under sub clause (v), an association of persons, or body of individuals, whether incorporated or not. It is in this sense, that an association is referred to in Section 2(1)(f)(iii) which would therefore include a consortium consisting of two or more bodies corporate, at least one of whom is a body corporate incorporated in a country other than India."

PARTY APPOINTED ARBITRATORS

One of the main concerns of the users of arbitration, as to its efficiency as a means of dispute resolution, involves the role of party appointed arbitrators in the operation of arbitration tribunals.

The system of party appointed arbitrators traces its historical background to almost 100 years back. It commenced somewhere in the early 1900s in the United States of America where typical labour contracts provided for arbitration as the only form of dispute resolution. Even today, collective bargaining agreements in the USA provide for arbitrations in which the management appoints an arbitrator; the union appoints another arbitrator; and the two jointly select the third arbitrator. This is probably the beginning of the much criticized party appointed arbitrator system, which continues till date. As commercial arbitrations became popular and wide spread, the approach to arbitrator selection resulted in party appointed arbitrators who were expected to advocate for the party that appointed them. In other words, the major criticism was and is that the union appointed arbitrator was and is sympathetic to the workers' claim and that the management appointed arbitrator was and is expected to favour the company.

It was around 9 years back that the debate regarding party appointed arbitrators was reignited when Prof. Jan Paulson, during his lecture in the Miami School of Law, stated that party appointed arbitrators are likely to act as an arbitrator advocate on behalf of the party who appoints them and perceived this as a moral hazard for international dispute resolution. Prof. Paulson recommended that any arbitrator should be chosen jointly by a neutral body.

At this juncture it is imperative to note the process followed since 2013 in India, which may be called the screener selection process of party appointed arbitrators. This is a unique selection process of appointing arbitrators that stems from the rules of the International Institute for Conflict Resolution & Prevention ("CPR") and addresses most of the concerns mentioned above. Rule 5.4 (d) of the CPR Rules for Administered Arbitration of International Disputes provides for a panel of three arbitrators where two of the arbitrators are to be selected by the parties without knowing which party nominated each of them.

CPR discusses with the parties regarding the qualifications and experience that the parties are looking for in their arbitrators. CPR then searches from its panel of distinguished arbitrators and the parties are provided with a list of eligible candidates who are required to confirm their availability to serve as arbitrators, their fees and also disclosure of any circumstances that may give doubts about their independence and /or impartiality. Both parties are required to select their top three candidates in order of preference from the list of its party appointed arbitrators. The Institute thereafter appoints the arbitrators based on the order of preference indicated by the parties.

The CPR Arbitration rules provide that both the parties and the CPR are prohibited from disclosing any information regarding and / or indicating which party selected which arbitrator. In other words, CPR the institute acts a 'SCREEN' enabling the parties to appoint arbitrators without the arbitrators knowing which party appointed which arbitrator. So the objectives of impartiality and independence are ensured thus eliminating the risk of bias by the arbitrator in favour of the appointing party while at the same time preserving the parties' right to appoint their arbitrator.

The United States Capital Market Security Exchange Commission (SEC) which regulates the U.S. security market and Securities and Exchange Board of India (SEBI) which regulates the Indian securities market have a somewhat similar system. CPR, SEC and SEBI's panel called 'Panel of Distinguished Neutrals' have around 600 neutrals worldwide, SEC has as many as 6000 arbitrators spread over 50 states of the USA and couple of other international locations. SEBI has around 350 arbitrators spread over around 18 locations all over India, on its panel.

In case of SEC it is the SEC that sends the names of 10 to 12 arbitrators to choose from its panel of arbitrators. The neutral list selection system will generate a list of 10 arbitrators each from the public arbitrator roster, non-public arbitrator roster and from the chair person roaster and the list will be sent to both parties simultaneously. The parties will then receive background information and history of past 10 years for each listed arbitrator.

In India, SEBI has a separate panel of arbitrators in each of 18 locations. It is the address of the investors where the arbitration proceedings are held. The disputing parties are to send the names of arbitrators to the exchange in order of preference. If any names are found common, such an arbitrator is appointed. If no common names are found, both the lists are scrapped and the exchange's designated authority selects the arbitrator from the residual names.

Contrary to the traditional format of having odd number of arbitrators, London Metal Exchange (LME) which is a Commodity Exchange where non-ferrous metals (other than gold, silver and platinum metals) like copper, zinc, lead, etc. are traded, initially involves the appointment of two arbitrators. In case of a failure to arrive at an agreement on the award, then an umpire is brought in. Under the English Act 1996 (UK) in such a scenario where the empire replaces the party appointed arbitrators, they (the earlier party appointed arbitrators) argue the case on behalf of the parties before the umpire, who is required to make a final decision.

At this point, I would also like to mention the rise of the 'professional arbitrator' whose livelihood predominantly depends on the receipt of appointments to serve as an arbitrator, whose services are remunerated on the basis on demand. Such arbitrators earn substantial fees. Therefore there is a financial incentive behind one's appointment as arbitrator.

This is observed in Cofely vs. Bingham (2016) EWHC 240 (Comm); 2016 2 ALL E.R (Comm) 129, a decision of the UK High Court. A trend of repeat appointments by a party, coupled with evidence of partisan behaviour during the hearings led the judge to conclude that apparent bias on the part of the arbitrator had been established.
